Personal statement

What are the optimal innovation strategies for firm performance in changing environments?

To respond to this paramount question, I develop rigorous and relevant research which provides a contribution for international scholarship, industry leaders, policy makers, students, and broader audiences. My interest mostly focuses on technology-intensive competition, and I leverage both quantitative and qualitative methods to explore the effects of innovation strategies, business models, team compositions, and inter-firm relations. I dedicate careful attention to multi-level implications, cognitive mechanisms, and the moderating role of contingencies, particularly in turbulent environments. My main research targets are top management journals (FT 50; ABS 4*, 4, 3). Yet, I also dedicate time and resources to practitioners' outlets, media exposure, impact projects, and support to policy makers such as Industry Associations, the House of Commons, and the European Commission. I am considered one of the leading academic experts in the motorsport and Formula 1 industry, and I have received several honors and grants for my research, teaching, and impact. My pedagogical style fosters experiential learning as a combination of research-driven knowledge with hands-on industry engagement. Among other acknowledgements, in 2018 I was listed in the "World's Best 40 under 40 Business Professors".
